Chinese Dog Is Gaining Well Merited Recognition Here and in England.

78 SPLENDID WATCHDOG

A breed of dogs that has been gaining popularity steadily is the Chow Chow, a breed of Chinese origin that first was brought to England over a century ago. where it since has made rapid strides, until to-day it is one of the fashionable breeds both in England and in this mintey. The Chow is as a rule red in color, although there are many blacks seen and some blues. The last mentioned is one of the most highly prized of all and comparatively few specimens are to be found.

A striking feature of the dog is a marked distrust of strangers, which tendency is shown at an early age. However, when once their confidence is gained they are the most loyal and affectionate of companions, always ready for a good romp and the best of companions for children. These dogs are keen in pursuit of game and have a good scent, with wonderfully acute hearng and great powers of endurance. They are death on rats and all sorts of vermin and are game for anything, although they hold themselves aloof from other dogs and will not look for trouble unless it is forced upon them. When trouble oes come they will be found to be well able to take care of their end of any and can give real protection if called

At all the more prominent kennel shows the Chow classes are well filled and the Greenacre and Win-Sum Kennels always have attractive benches which are the centre of attraction for a large number of visitors. The supply of this fashionable breed is always far short of the demand and a bright future is ahead of it. The description of the approved type for the Chow is: umber of visitors. The supply of this

Diseases Often Are Caused by Use of Prepared Instead of Natural Foods.

RAW MEAT IS HELPFUL

Dogs are especially liable to attacks of gastritis, an acute form of indigestion, which is particularly prevalent among small pet dogs, especially those which are kept indoors and fed on all kinds of unnatural dainties. The dog by nature is affed with wonderful diges-tive powers, so much so that he ought to be able to bolt his food and digest hard substances. It is only necessary to look at a dog's teeln to see what nature intended when she endowed him with fangs to tear the flesh of his victims, with crunchers to break up small bones and with front teeth suited for getting tiny particles off the bigger bones. A dog has no misticating teeth --because he was not intended to masti-

-because he was not intended to masticate but to holt his food.

Why then should a dog suffer from gastritis or indigestion? The answer is simple, as dogs that suffer in this way have not been allowed to utilize their disestive functions in the natural nanner. Unless n dog is fed upon natural food the natural organs will not remain in proper condition. They will become rusty just as machinery will become rusty if not put to its proper use. What causes gastritis therefore is improper and irregular feeding, and parimproper and irregular feeding, and par-ticularly the use of too much patent prepared type of food, to the exclusion of raw means and things of that sort. Foods that are easy to digest will wear out a dog's organs a great deal faster than foods that in the ordinary way to A dog was intended to be fed only

These things want to be kept in mind especially by those who have delicate many of these highly bred dogs stand on quite a different basis as regards health and constitution than does the hyena or jackal, and the digestive func-tions of many of these tenderly nutured little animals have to be looked at from an entirely different light, there cannot be better. It may be necessary to give a pet dog a particularly select form of diet most of the time, but it is a fact that no harm will result from giving it Raw meat, with a good bone to pick

Although less than a year old the Cos Cob Kennels of young Airedale terrier stock at the present time is making an excellent record.
